When RiverPointe first moved into their new worship center, the focus was on the basics. However over time, the church wanted to transform their stage to provide multiple options for look and feel of the space. River Pointe and AD worked together in a rapid-prototyping method to explore concepts.

This was a highly interactive exercise with the church utilizing real-time changes to explore options for their staging. The church's leadership visited our office, and in one day, the AD team took the project from concept to 3-D flythrough. The model was built with the client watching over the process and contributing thoughts on what should be included in the design. In the end, we provided a full photorealistic rendering for the church to take back to communicate the concept to the team for implementation without the inconvenience of time delays and multiple design changes.
